THE FULFILMENT OF A DREAM

ON September 18, 1939, speaking before the National Assembly, President Manuel L. Quezon recommended the creation of a new city in the Diliman Estate, north of Manila. The plan was received enthusiastically by the Assemblymen; a few weeks later, they passed Commonwealth Act No. 502, which was signed by President Quezon on October 12, 1939.

This was the beginning — on paper — of Quezon City.

As envisioned by President Quezon, this was to be the capital city of the Philippines, which "politically shall be the seat of the National Government, aesthetically, the show-place of the nation — a place that thousands of people will come to visit as an epitome of the culture and the spirit of the country; socially, a dignified concentration of human life, aspirations, endeavors and achievements; and economically, as a productive self-contained community."

As soon as the Republic was inaugurated, President Manuel A. Roxas created a committee to select the most suitable site on which to build the new capital city. The choice was the Ipo-Novaliches area; and the sum of $25 million was made available by the U.S. War Damage Commission to construct new buildings. "But before cash can be transformed into concrete," said Justice George A. Malcolm, "the planning commission must complete its work, the blueprints must be studied and approved, and months of construction must precede the government's actual move to the fashionable and fast growing city northeast of Manila."

On July 17, 1948, Quezon City became the capital of the Republic. As he signed the law, President Elpidio Quirino said: "From now on, Manila will be our show window and Quezon City our workshop insofar as our government is concerned."

The dream was, at last, on the way to fulfillment.

Aside from President Quezon who, himself, acted as mayor of the city from Oct. 12, 1939 to Nov. 4, 1939, the mayors — Tomas Morato, Ponciano A. Bernardo, Nicanor A. Roxas, Ignacio Santos Diaz, and Norberto S. Amoranto — have all left their mark in the making of this metropolis. All of them contributed in fulfilling the dream upon which the city was envisioned.

Today, from the talahib-covered land that it was when President Quezon looked upon it and dreamed, it has become a great and splendid city that throbs with progress, beauty, and achievement. Most of the contribution came from the virile and vigorous leadership of Mayor Norberto S. Amoranto.

On this first day of 1972, he will be inducted for the fifth time. No other mayor of Quezon City has served this long; no other man has given more of himself to the city than Mayor Amoranto.

This day, too, marks the first inauguration of sixteen councilors of the city. They come from various facets of our society. In their hands, helped by the capable and willing support of the vice mayor who, himself, has the welfare of Quezon City deep in his heart, lie the destiny of this metropolis for the next four years.

President Quezon's dream is now becoming a breathing, shining reality. And the next goal will be that of greatness — for the city that we love and for the people which includes all of us. Knowing the ability and wisdom and dedication of these officials — Mayor Amoranto, Vice Mayor Albert, and all the councilors — there is no doubt this goal will be reached.

To them, therefore, on this momentous occasion, we lift our hearts in felicitations, and in earnest faith and hope.

HON. NORBERTO S. AMORANTO
Mayor

Mayor Norberto S. Amoranto

Amoranto never expected to become a politician. Above all, he wanted to be a successful lawyer, a dream fulfilled after he finished law from the Philippine Law School and received his master's degree from the University of Manila, with taxation as the subject of his thesis.

He served the government, first as messenger in the now-defunct Executive Bureau and, later, as clerk at the Bureau of Supply. Then he moved to the Bureau of Internal Revenue, where he eventually became a senior tax examiner. He resigned from this post in 1952 and engaged in the private practice of law, handling mostly tax cases. Soon, he became recognized as one of the Philippines' outstanding tax consultants.

An active civic leader at that time, he was vice-president of the League of Parent-Teachers Association of Quezon City, president of the La Loma Parent-Teachers Association for fourteen consecutive years, and lawyer of the Farmers and Tenants Federation of the Philippines, with offices in Quezon City.

On January 11, 1954, the late President Ramon Magsaysay asked him to become vice mayor and concurrently acting mayor of the Capitol City. He could not refuse, even though he knew that he would not make as much money in the government service as he was making then in his private practice.

Upon the recommendation of and sponsorship by the late Senate President Eulogio Rodriguez, Sr., he was elevated to the mayorship on February 4, 1954. "Since you are an excellent tax consultant," "Amang" Rodriguez told him, "we expect you to make Quezon City the prosperous capital city that both I and President Quezon dreamed it to be."

The appointment, actually, took Quezon City and the Nacionalista Party there by surprise. In fact, some older Nacionalista leaders strongly opposed his appointment, feeling that they deserved the job better. Indeed, Amoranto himself was unspeakably surprised, because he did not know about the appointment until he was about to be sworn in. What he was expecting then was a key position in the BIR.

Amoranto was Quezon City's last appointive mayor. In the first mayoralty elections of November 10, 1959, he ran against twenty candidates, all of whom told the people to elect "anyone of them but Amoranto." They threw mud on his face, shouted invectives all over. But, in his characteristic campaign style, Amoranto remained calm; he never hit back.

When the votes were counted, he won against his closest rival, ex-mayor Ignacio Santos Diaz, by a comfortable margin. He, thus, became the first elective mayor of the Capitol City. Surprisingly, though, except for the vice mayor and one councilor, all his running mates lost, giving the Citizens' League for Good Government the control of the City Council.

He became virtually alone in the center of a political low pressure area. His pet measures were blocked by the Council. And the situation turned even more grim, when his vice mayor turned against him, joined the opposition, and fought him as the standard bearer of the Liberal Party. At that time, he had just recovered from a heart ailment. But, as always, he was serene about the whole thing. He campaigned with equanimity and confidence — and won by a tremendous margin.

The great Emperor Augustus is said to have remarked that he "found Rome of brick and left her of marble." In the same vein, this could, also, be said of Amoranto and Quezon City. Like Augustus' contribution to the improvement of taxation in Rome, Amoranto, for the first time in the history of Quezon City, codified all city ordinances on taxes and revenues. There was, during all his years as Mayor, continuous improvement of public services. Construction of streets and bridges goes on unabated. Garbage problem has been solved. New parks are coming up time and again. The problems of peace and order have been constantly worked on. And, of all cities in the Philippines, Quezon City never had a school crisis.

When Amoranto assumed the mayor's post in 1954, there was hardly any money in the government coffers, and the income was a mere P4 million annually. Today, the cash position of the city is enviable — and the income has shot up to an amazing P32 million.

Amoranto was born in Biñan, Laguna on June 4, 1908, to the late Lucio Amoranto and Rufina Salandanan. His mother was a vendor in the public market, while his father worked their small farm. As a boy, he learned the dignity of honest labor, as he helped his father in the fields and his mother in the public market.

He studied in the public schools of Biñan, and at the Laguna Provincial High School, in Santa Cruz. It was here where he met pretty Asisola Lim who, in 1936, became his bride. Their happy union has been blessed with four children: Norberto, Jr., Wilhelmina, Rebecca, and Lucio. To this day, Mrs. Amoranto is still "Sit" to "Berting" even while his mind is beset with numerous city problems. She is still a school teacher.

Still the same sincere, humble, loyal, grateful, and approachable friend, Amoranto sees problems not through political gimmickry. Politics, to him, is a game that is played only during election time, and partisan considerations should be cast aside immediately after. Political slavery is fatal to a progressive administration; but, as a wellknown writer said, Amoranto will not hesitate to dance to the music of the political gods if by so doing it would redound to the development of benefit of the city.

He goes to the office everyday, aware that his office is a public trust. He has kept close touch with the people, visiting them at their homes, studying their problems on the spot. As writer, Isabelo Crisostomo says: "Perhaps no other politician in any city has visited as many homes as he has done. Perhaps it is safe to assume that there is hardly any home in Quezon City which he has not visited."

And people clamor for his leadership, not because he is a politician, but as a close and devoted friend.

INVOCATION

THIS day is of surpassing significance to us, O God. Those whom we have chosen to lead this City for the next four years are here to swear before You, their unswerving allegiance to our country and their unselfish devotion to our people.

We know that without Your guidance, whatever we do will be of no moment. And unless You guard this City, in vain will our guards keep watch. Only when our acts conform to Your laws of justice and freedom can we have peace. Only when our motives and aims accord with Your divine will can we prosper.

The problems that beset our City are numerous and formidable. We are living in troubled times of uncertainty and fear. We expect so much from these leaders, O God. Our hopes and dreams of a better life are in their hands.

Be with them, O God, as they pursue their official duties for our sake. Speak to them with the supreme voice of conscience. Inspire them with the greatness of their task. Overrule any desire of theirs to put personal and partisan gain above the public welfare and well-being.

Stop them, O God, from wallowing in the lust for selfish domination. And strengthen in them the ambition to serve their people with integrity and wisdom and faith.

For us, O God, the citizens of this beautiful Capitol City, inflame in our hearts the drive to keep a vigilant watch and close scrutiny of their fidelity and usefulness, for our own sake. And animate us continually to cooperate with them for the ultimate good of our country and the prosperity of our people.

On this solemn moment of dedication and truth, banish from all our hearts the ill will and rancor brought about by the bitter and spirited contest. Fill all our beings with goodwill and hope, so that all of us will be united, all of us will be honestly, devoutly and loyally cooperating for the good of our city, and in honor of our unwavering faith in Your beneficence and love forever.

Amen.

Laying of cornerstone of Government Center, Quezon City, November 15, 1940. President Quezon may be seen in the center.

THE BEGINNINGS OF QUEZON CITY

ON October 12, 1939, President Manuel L. Quezon signed into law (Commonwealth Act No. 502) the special charter creating Quezon City. This was the culmination of the efforts to create a capital city that would be something like Washington, D.C. or Rome. This was not only the dream of President Quezon, but also of Senate President Eulogio Rodriguez, Sr., Don Alejandro Rocés, Tomas Morato, and many others who talked about it enthusiastically in the company of President Quezon.

President Quezon, himself, was the first Mayor of Quezon City. Actually, the charter of Quezon City, which was directly patterned after that of Washington, D.C., automatically made the President of the Philippines concurrently its City Mayor. Quezon's term lasted from October 12th to November 4th, 1939.

The first City Council was composed by the country's most distinguished statesmen and civic leaders. With President Quezon (being Mayor) as head, the City Council had the following as members: Vicente Fragante (then Secretary of Public Works), vice mayor, Eusebio Aguilar (then Director of Health), councilor, Jose Paez, councilor, and Don Alejandro Rocés, councilor.

The various departments of the city government were staffed by such luminaries as: Dr. Eusebio Aguilar (Department of Health), Vicente Fragante (City Engineer), Tomas B. Morato (Chief of Police), Pio Pedrosa (City Treasurer), Jake Rosenthal (City Assessor), and Emilio Abello (City Attorney).

The first City Secretary was Damian L. Jimenez; while the first Judge of the Court of First Instance was Perfecto Palacio.

These men were all close friends of President Quezon; they worked for the love of it. To them, it was a great privilege to help establish the dream city of the late President.

After President Quezon, the City Mayorship fell into the able hands of Tomas B. Morato. Ponciano Bernardo was his vice mayor and concurrent City Engineer. Morato held the post until just before the outbreak of the Second World War.

Up to that date, though, the dream envisioned by President Quezon of making the city the Philippines' capital city had not been realized. The government buildings of the nation were still in Manila; and the amendment to the Charter making it the capital city had not been passed.

After the death of President Quezon, the work was continued by President Manuel Roxas; but he died before the law could be passed. It was President Elpidio Quirino who worked ceaselessly for the passage of the law. He signed the law creating Quezon City as the nation's capital (Republic Act No. 333) on July 17, 1948.

Faithful to the original dream of President Quezon, the site of the government center was established in what is now Diliman District.

The foundations for the national buildings have been established; millions of pesos have been poured into it. We can only hope that the powers-that-be will work fast enough to make this dream of a government center a gleaming reality.

The inauguration of Quezon City as the national capital was held with much fanfare on October 22, 1949. []

President Quezon stands at the grandstand during the civic-military parade commemorating the 5th anniversary of the Philippine Commonwealth, after which the cornerstone of the Quezon City Hall was laid at the rotunda, which is now the corner of Timog Avenue and Edsa. In photo with Quezon are: Gen. Basilio Valdez, then Speaker Quintin Paredes, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, then Secretary Rafael Alunan, and Secretary Teofilo Sison.

ADVOCATES OF JUSTICE IN QUEZON CITY

QUEZON CITY has seven judges presiding in the city courts, of which there are seven branches. The executive judge — and concurrently presiding judge of Branch VI — is Judge Oscar A. Inocentes, one of the brightest and most competent apostles of justice in the capitol city. Born on September 16, 1931, he received his degree of bachelor of laws from Far Eastern University in 1954.

He started in the government service as deputy clerk of court in QC; a year later, he became special assistant of the city secretary, with special designation of "special prosecutor" on police matters. From 1959 to 1962, he was special counsel, in the city fiscal's office, after which he became 6th assistant city fiscal. On May 29, 1969, he was appointed city judge.

He has a sterling record in the government service; all awards — including a Presidential Citation from the President of the Philippines (July 31, 1964), award from the Capitol Jaycees (Aug. 25, 1964), award for fearless fight against crime from the QC Bar Ass'n (Sept. 17, 1964), Most Outstanding Fiscal award from the National Lawyers' Convention (Oct. 10, 1965), citation for exemplary performance as ass't. city fiscal from the Justice & Court Reporters' Association (Feb. 28, 1965), award as brilliant prosecutor from the Capitol Press Club, and many others — attest to his splendid performance as a devoted public servant.

Later, he became a clerk-stenographer, then chief clerk, administrative officer, special prosecutor, and assistant city fiscal. He was appointed city judge in 1969, at the same time teaching at the Institute of Law, FEU.

Noted for her sincerity and impartiality is Judge Concepcion B. Buencamino, presiding judge of Branch IV. Her decisions are

OUTSTANDING MEN IN THE GOVERNMENT OF QUEZON CITY

AT the heart of the City administration is the office of Mayor Amoranto. To fulfill the multifarious obligations and responsibilities of the office to the people, it is divided into several divisions and offices. Among these are the Division of City Public Services, which is currently under the efficient leadership of City Architect Luciano Aquino; the Permits and License Division, which is entrusted with the responsibility of issuing Mayor's permits to all businesses in the city, and which is headed with dedication by Alberto Galarpe; the Social Welfare Services, which assists individuals, families and groups in solving problems in social relationships, and, also, in times of emergency; Youth Welfare Service, which is for the coordination and supervision of youth activities in the city; the City Library, which is headed, with intelligence and devotion, by Atty. Felicidad Peralta; and the Administrative Division, which is the center of communications, records, and which coordinates the functions of the various departments and office of the city administration.

The secretary to the Mayor has the tremendous responsibility of supervising the functions of the various departments and offices of the city, including the approval of social permits, business licenses, etc. He is, thus, the "little Mayor" the man on whose shoulders the weight of city burdens rests whenever the Mayor is absent. This position was formerly occupied by Felino Landicho, then by Eduardo T. Paredes (now councilor), and now, by Anacleto Madrilejo, a former councilor and prominent political leader from Balintawak. With him is a confidential advisory staff which performs confidential missions for the Mayor.

Secretary Madrilejo, an affable and engaging man, has been secretary to the Mayor since January 1960. Born in Balintawak, on April 26, 1910, he is married to the former Basilia Bagobagon, with whom he has six children: Roberto (now in USA), Lourdes, Jovita, Romanita, Corazon, and Elizabeth. He is a product of the Caloocan public schools, National University high school, and he took his pre-Law course at the University of Manila.

Madrilejo

He is an active civic leader, having been president of about ten civic organizations and adviser to many other associations. He is a loyal friend, an honest public servant, and a good worker.

THE DEPARTMENTS

The machinery of city government is considerably supported by ten departments and principal offices whose heads are appointed by the President of the Philippines, with the approval of the Commission on Appointments. These departments are entrusted with the execution and implementation of various policies and resolutions emanating from the city's chief executive. These departments are, therefore, the working arm of the Mayor, and the success of any Mayor's administration depends a lot on how well the Mayor and these men could work together with harmony and understanding and faith.

The City Treasurer is, of course, in charge of the Finance Department. Head of the office, at present, is soft-spoken, firm, and dignified Jesus I. Calleja, who was born 53 years ago in the Bicol region. He has been in the treasury service for the last 32 years, occupying such positions as: officer-in-charge, Iloilo City Treasury, officer-in-charge, Office of the Provincial Treasurer of Davao, acting provincial treasurer of Samar, provincial treasurer of Camarines Sur, and concurrently supervising treasurer-at-large of the Department of Finance.

Calleja

Calleja graduated cum laude when he received his degrees in commerce, in industrial chemistry, and in associate in arts. He has been a certified training officer by IPA, UP, a resource speaker of the UP Government Center, and member of the Reorganization Commission, Panel 15.

He is a charter member of the Naga City Lions Club and associate member of the Naga City Jaycees.

The Police Department of Quezon City has one of the most difficult police responsibilities in the country, since upon its shoulders rests the good image of the capital of the Republic.

At present, the QCPD is under the capable leadership of Col. Tomas B. Karingal who, on February 6, 1960, was recalled by President Garcia from his job as provincial commander in Iloilo, and subsequently designated as acting chief of police of Quezon City. In 1963, he was returned to the Philippine Constabulary, and later, became provincial commander of Batangas, until he retired on July 1964.

However, he was placed on extended government service, and was assigned as commanding officer of the Law Enforcement Command, Bureau of Customs, in Manila. On July 5, 1967, his name was submitted by the President to the Commission on Appointments for the position of Chief of Police of Quezon City, and he was confirmed on the same day.

Two months later, he was again recalled to active duty in the AFP, and was reassigned in the Customs. Three months after that, he was returned to Quezon City as the police chief, a position he has kept steadily since then.

A graduate of the PMA, Col. Karingal has distinguished himself in the service of his country during the war, assigned to intelligence work. He is one of the real heroes of the war, and has received numerous awards, including the Military Merit Medal, with two "Anahaw Oak Leaves", the Distinguished Service Star, AFP, and the Honor Medal, Bureau of Customs.

The Department of Engineering is responsible for the job of fulfilling the dream of President Quezon in building a capitol city of beautiful avenues, parks, broad streets, properly-zoned government, industrial, business and residential areas that would adequately meet the continuously increasing needs of the residents of Quezon City.

At the helm of this important department is City Engineer Pantaleon P. Tabora, a hardworking and energetic public servant.

Tabora

He has been in the government for 27 years, starting as a foreman in Bulacan's district engineer's office at P1.50 and rising consistently as his skill and ability are recognized, until he was appointed City Engineer of QC, on June 23, 1963, a job he holds up to the present.

He was born on July 27, 1914, in Tondo, Manila, and educated in Tondo public schools. He received his BS in CE degree at UP. He is married to the former Nelly

M. Borlaza.

Engineer Tabora has been president of the Cubao Parent-Teacher Ass'n, chairman of General Implementing Committee, 1962-1966 UNICEF-HG assisted training program, Pilot Project on Health Education, QC (first of its kind in the country), director of Piñahan PTA, Kamias Residents & Civic League, QC Employees Savings & Loan Ass'n., and member of the PSCE, and Major Thoroughfares Committee, BPH. He has received an Award of Distinction from the Philippine Institute of Leadership.

The office of the city auditor examines and settles the accounts of the city treasurer, and is, therefore, charged with the responsibility of protecting public funds from possible mis-appropriation. The city auditor, like the city treasurer, must, therefore, be a man of unimpeachable integrity and strength of character.

Quezon City is fortunate to have Atty. Arturo V. Uy to be its city auditor, considering that his qualifications are excellent and his reputation of highest order. He has been city auditor of Tacloban, provincial auditor of Leyte, and provincial auditor of Cebu.

Uy

He was appointed city auditor of Quezon City on February 6, 1968, and has since served the citizens of this city with distinction and honor.

Famed for its efficiency and effectiveness is the Quezon City Fire Department. Its good image is brought about by the service it has given, not only to the citizens of Quezon City, but, also, to those within the metropolitan area. The present chief of the QC Fire Department is Salvador G. Narcelles.

Narcelles

He started as a laborer in the QC engineering department in 1950; when a fire brigade was formed in QC, he was transferred there. He became deputy chief of this brigade, when it was turned into an independent department and was then known as the QC Fire Department. In 1954, he was appointed by the late President Mag-saysay as Fire Chief.

Today, he is the president of the Philippine Association of Fire Chiefs, and vice president, International Fire Chiefs' Association of Asia.

Born on July 6, 1918, in Rosario, La Union, he holds a bachelor of commerce degree from FEU. Under his leadership, QC now has one of the finest firefighting equipment and men in the country. He chairmanned the 5th general conference of the International Fire Chiefs' Association of Asia, hosted by the QC government last 1968.

He has received numerous citations and awards for his exemplary service to his country and people. Among them are: those from the QC Chamber of Commerce, the Philippine Institute of Leadership, Capitol Press Club, Quezon City Bar Association, Rosario La Union Professional Association, etc.

A few weeks ago, the office of the city assessor of Quezon City announced that the capital city is officially worth ₱1.5 billion in terms of real estate value. The latest assessment of taxable real estate in the city is ₱1,411,464.10 and the non-taxable real estate is worth ₱132,368,450.

The yeoman's job of keeping a close watch on these assessments, so that Quezon City can derive the most equitable income on them — for the good of all the residents of this city is Leonardo M. Cuyong, who predicts that in ten years, the cost of real estate in QC will rise by about 100%.

Cuyong

Born on November 22, 1922, in Balete, Aklan, he is married to the former Imelda Amoranto Villanueva, of Biñan, with whom he has five children. He has done extensive researches on taxation, especially on business and real estate; he received his BSC degree at FEU, and his MS in Business Administration at the same school. He, also, has taken courses in Junior and Senior Executive Development at UP, and he is a professor at the Philippine College of Commerce, in Manila.

He is president of the QC Government Supervisor and Employees Association, vice president of the Los Maduros Club, in Biñan, President of the International Lions Club, Biñan chapter, member of the Federation of Veterans, deputy, District Governor, Region XII, 1969-70, member of the Barangay Lions Club, organizer and honorary member of the Balintawak Lions Club, and director of the President's League Lions Club District 301.

Cuyong has been active in guerrilla work during the war; in 1946-47, he was security supervisor, of the Surplus Property Commission; 1948-1954, he was Field Inspector of the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes, and prior to his appointment as city assessor, he was chief of the Permits and License Division of QC.

He has received numerous awards and citations, foremost of which are the following: presidential award as president, Biñan Lions Club, Certificate of Merit as City Assessor, from the Legislative Journal Reports & Phil. Courier, Plaque of Merit and Distinction as City Assessor, 1970 Professional Artists of the Philippines, and many awards from the Lions Club, of which he is one of the most distinguished members and leaders.

Quezon City became a separate school division only on July 25, 1950; the first superintendent was a veteran educator, Pablo P. Reyes who, upon retirement in 1962, was succeeded by Alfredo J. Andal. When Andal retired, Mrs. Conmemoracion M. Concepcion was inducted into office on August 1, 1970 as the 3rd City Superintendent of Schools for QC.

Concepcion

In 1954, there were only 28,050 elementary school pupils and 2,126 high school students in Quezon City; today, the total enrolment has gone up to 143,677 — or, an increase of over 400%.

As the superintendent of schools, Mrs.

Concepcion is charged with effecting changes to bring about what she calls "unity in change." Born on November 2, 1913, she is married to Col. Santiago I. Concepcion (Ret.), with whom she has 3 boys and 1 girl. She has been a Smith-Mundt Fulbright scholar, a delegate to international, national, regional, and local conferences, and a consultant and/or resource person in many significant workshops, seminars and conferences.

Guarding the health of the QC residents is the Department of Health of Quezon City, under the vigorous and consummate leadership of its present chief, Dr. Petronio G. Monsod. A graduate of the U.P. College of Medicine, Dr.

Monsod

Monsod is, possibly, one of the nation's most outstanding health officers. He has been president of the sanitary division of Negros Occidental, where he later became assistant district health officer. He was medical officer-in-charge of the Social Hygiene Clinic of the Bureau of Health. In 1947, he was appointed City Health Officer by the late President Manuel Roxas. Today, he is the dean of all the department officers of Quezon City.

His life is a series of achievements from the time he was a topnotcher in the Bureau of Health entrance examinations in 1932. He was selected "Outstanding Physician of QC" in 1960, and has written numerous articles on health and medicine. The Philippine Board of Preventive Medicine and Public Health has given him a diplomate; he is a fellow of the Philippine Public Health Association; he was president of the Philippine Association of Medical Health Administrators, the Philippine Public Health Association, a job which he held twice. He was the founder and first president of the Quezon City Medical Society, past president of the League of Provincial and City Health Officers of the Philippines and the Rizalian Medical Society. He is now the vice president of the Association of PHO, CHO, and Chiefs of Hospital — Region 3.

Possibly his greatest achievement is the establishment and organization of the QC Health Department, which he has managed with unerring ability for almost a quarter of a century.

The office of the city secretary is a very fundamental one; those who have assumed this position in Quezon City are among the more illustrious citizens of our country. Under the city charter, the city secretary is elected by a majority vote of the members of the city council. And his responsibilities are many, and vital. He acts as the secretary of the city council, the board of tax appeals, and other boards of great need. He records all ordinances and keeps a journal of all proceedings; and his other duties are those that the council and Mayor may wish him to do.

The incumbent city secretary is Felipe L. Ting, a wellknown Quezon City business and civic leader. He was appointed to the position on August 18, 1965. Proof of his efficiency and diligence in the pursuit of his duties is the fact that he is, perhaps, the only city secretary to have occupied the position for that length of time.

Ting

At present, he is president of the League of Provincial and City Secretaries of the Philippines, which he has been holding since 1968. Likewise, he is, also, the president of the Quezon City Bayanihan Lions Club.

QUEZON CITY is one of the largest cities in the world, in point of area. It is as big as the District of Columbia, a little bigger than the principality of Liechtenstein, thrice bigger than Bermuda, ten times bigger than Macau, twenty times bigger than Wake Island, thirty times bigger than either Gibraltar or Midway Island, one hundred twenty times bigger than the principality of Monaco, and over four hundred times bigger than the Vatican City.

THE VISION OF TWO STALKS

By President Manuel L. Quezon

IT was five o'clock in the afternoon. Hand in hand, father and I were slowly trekking our way to town across the rice paddies that we were proud to call our own. Father, time and again, would glance here, then there, silently but with complacent satisfaction, at the beautiful, tall and healthy palay stalks which would soon fill our granary and supply us with our daily rice. He was smiling — with contentment and joyful anticipation.

All of a sudden, I recall distinctly, his face became more serious. He stopped me a few meters from the road, with his eyes fixed on some definite object that caught his attention. He pointed to a group of tall, big, erect, robust and evergreen stalks, just beginning to bloom. The said group of stalks towered above all others, prominent and imposing in stature that an observer would not fail to notice it.

"Do you see that group?" Father asked.

"Nice, isn't it?" was my quick reply.

"Nice, yes," my father said, "but self-assuming, proud and arrogant. The way it stands above the others, looking down upon its neighbors, shows nothing but conceit, motivated by nothing but its egoistic feeling. Why, its buds are just beginning to bloom, looking as if it were the only stalk of the whole ricefield. The other one over there, see?" pointing to another stalk bent down by the weight of its matured and almost ripened grain.

Without waiting for me to answer, he continued, "It has its head bowed low without pretense. And yet it bears the really important thing."

"Naturally, because the grains are heavy. That slim stem cannot at all carry the weight it bears without bending. It is but logical," I answered confidently.

"The point I am driving at, Manuel, is this. A man, at the prime of life, who starts tasting the fruits of success should be humble and should remain humble in dealing with his fellowmen. He must not be like that tall, erect and conceited stalk, drunk with self-assurance. Not because he has almost reached the apex of his ambition should he look down upon his brethren as his slaves and inferiors. He should not boast of his glories and render unto abject submission all others less fortunate than he is. The more laurels a man gets, the more must the common man be his friend and the recipient of his unceasing devotion. He must bow down to the needs of his brothers which are in his power and subject to the resources he can give. Companionship, friendliness, fraternity and equality are the best assets a man can have; aloofness, conceit and superiority over others, his heaviest liabilities.

"You must never forget that, Manuel. May the vision of the two stalks always cross your memory."

I kept on matching his pace as we neared town. I did not answer him. I kept silent. My old man seemed to dig deep into my thoughts. Then he sighed a deep sigh of relief, assured that I had well digested the substance of his short sermon. In fact, deep within me I was engraving his words with careful precision.

Today, as it has been since that fateful day, I am slowly but steadily coming to realize the truth of my father's observation. And I am thankful. I owe everything to that simple but priceless message.

REVOLUTION BEGAN IN QUEZON CITY

A vignette of the Philippine revolution

By Prof. Teodoro
A. Agoncillo

THAT night of August 19, Andres Bonifacio, together with Jacinto, Procopio Bonifacio, Teodoro Plata and Aguedo del Rosario, slipped through the cordon of Spanish sentries, reaching Balintawak before midnight. Pio Valenzuela followed the next day. On the 21st, Bonifacio and Jacinto, to guard the secret plans of the Katipunan against possible discovery, agreed, in a written document, to change the society's code by henceforth using numbers instead of letters of the alphabet, a step that was taken, no doubt, in view of the discovery of the Katipunan key to its secret code. In the afternoon of the same day, the rebels, numbering around 500, left Balintawak and proceeded to the neighboring hamlet of Kangkong where Apolonio Samson, a Katipunan man, gave them food and lodging. Here, the next morning, the revolutionists exchanged views on the revolution but did not pass any resolution. It was in Pugadlawin, where they proceeded upon leaving Samson's place in the afternoon of the 22nd, that the more than 1,000 members of the Katipunan met in the yard of Juan A. Ramos, son of Melchora Aquino, the famed "Mother" of the Katipuneros, in the morning of August 23rd. Considerable discussion arose whether the revolt against the Spanish government should be started on the 29th. Only one man protested against the plan of revolt at such an early date, and it was Bonifacio's own brother-in-law, Teodoro Plata. But he was overruled in his stand that the time was not yet propitious for such desperate action, that there was a dearth of arms and ammunitions, and that the rebels would starve as the palay had just been planted. Bonifacio then announced the decision and, standing on an improvised platform, shouted: "Brothers, it was agreed to continue with the plan of revolt. My brothers, do you swear to repudiate the government that oppresses us?" And the rebels, shouting as one man, replied: "Yes, sir!" "That being the case," Bonifacio added, "bring out your cedulas and tear them to pieces to symbolize our determination to take up arms!" There was a rustle of papers and in a minute the yard was littered with torn cedulas. Amidst this ceremony, the rebels, with tear-stained eyes, shouted: "Long live the Philippines! Long live the Katipunan!"

In the midst of this dramatic scene, some Katipunan members coming from Manila and Kalookan burst in upon them and cried: "Dong Andres! The civil guards are almost behind us and will reconnoiter the mountains." The Supremo immediately ordered: "Brothers, get ready and deploy." The men hastily made preparations to retreat. Others, caught unaware by the suddenness of the news, thoughtlessly grasped the pots of boiling rice, poured the half-cooked contents into their hats containing cut tobacco leaves, and ate the black mixture of rice and tobacco as they marched toward Pasong Tamo. For these men were hungry, tired, sleepy and suffering from the cold weather. Confusion reigned in the dark. Bonifacio placed the money of the Katipunan in Dr. Valenzuela's medical bag and instructed Francisco Carreon to return to Manila to contact his men. "Be careful, everybody is questioned there," was the warning Carreon received from persons he met on his errand back to the city.

The rebels arrived at the house of Melchora Aquino, popularly called Tandang Sora, on August 24th. Since the general uprising was to commence on the 29th, it was planned to notify all the rebels from the surrounding towns of Manila of the simultaneous attack on the city at midnight of the same day. At ten the following morning, however, while the rebels were discussing future plans of offense and defense, some women with their children excitedly ran toward the rebels, shouting: "The civil guards and the infantrymen are here!" Hardly had the warning been given when a burst of rifle fire was heard and the revolutionists threw themselves on the ground to avoid being hit. Commanded by Bonifacio, the defenders deployed and then encircled the attacking civil guards and infantrymen, numbering about forty, and in the skirmish that followed the rebels lost two men and the civil guards one. It was the singular good fortune of the attackers that in thus being outflanked and outnumbered they came to grips with a mass of inexperienced men who, armed with nothing but bolos and sharpened bamboo poles, failed to massacre them in cold blood. Under cover of the thick cogon grass, the civil guards and infantrymen retreated, while the defenders, without sufficient arms, took the opportunity to withdraw from the skirmish line and inched their way to Balara. The first skirmish had been fought and the struggle for liberation had commenced. []

Manuel L. Quezon

EXTRAORDINARY FILIPINO

By Justice George Malcolm

QUEZON was an elusive, many-sided man. His inconsistencies were so manifest as to make him consistently inconsistent. No one can ever hope to do justice to the numerous facets of the life of this extraordinary Filipino. I will merely set down my personal impressions of him.

Quezon made full use of a long day, rising early and retiring late. His favorite time for entertaining — at least so far as I was concerned — was at breakfast. Over the breakfast table, we conversed on a wide variety of topics. I came to dread these repasts, on account of a tactical mistake in decorum that I made at one of our early conferences. Asked by my host what I would like to drink and noticing that he was having chocolate, I answered "chocolate". This acquired Filipino trait of polite equivocation was to haunt me, for if there is any beverage that I detest, it is chocolate. Alas, ever after, it was served to me!

When I would leave the Quezon dining room at about eight in the morning, a crowd of supplicants had already gathered. These people would be received with regal grace, and Quezon would appease or lecture as his fancy dictated. Yet withal, he was a lonely man who appeared always to be seeking something which eluded him — peace of mind.

On one occasion, I had as my guest a Lieutenant of the U.S. Navy, to whom I was showing the sights. We were in John Canson's Santa Ana Cabaret, reputed the largest such establishment in the world. As the Lieutenant and I were partaking of our dinner, in came a solitary Quezon. His walk and demeanor showed fatigue and dejection, but when he sighted me, his face lighted up and he became a new man. What Quezon wanted was a breathing spell away from the affairs of state, the importunities of the multitude, and the flattery of the sycophants who surrounded him.

Quezon had a sense of humor. When a baby arrived in the Malcolm household in November, 1933, the news somehow reached him aboard a steamer on the Pacific. He radioed me: "Congratulations. Being born in the Philippines makes your daughter eligible for the Presidency of the Philippines as successor to my son." You will notice that even in this informal message, the Quezon family was ranked first.

Quezon had no compunctions about spending public funds to pay for a luxurious mode of living abroad. He also took little heed of his own finances. In accordance with Filipino custom, personal money matters were left in the capable hands of Mrs. Quezon. Giving the lie to partisan charges that Quezon was a multi-millionaire was the fact that when he died his fortune — consisting mostly of real estate — was valued at a modest P300,000.

Quezon, as had Rizal, swerved from Catholicism to Freemasonry. A literary battle still rages over whether Rizal, at the eleventh hour before his execution, abjured Masonry. No such doubt exists concerning Quezon's return to the Church.

Quezon was born of Catholic parents, studied in Catholic schools, married a steadfast Catholic lady, and reared a Catholic family. The only son became a Catholic priest. Quezon was nevertheless a Free-mason for a score of years, became Grand Master of the Lodge of the Philippines, and was elected to the thirty-third degree by the Supreme Council of Scottish Rite Masons. He received Masonic honors all over the world.

On the eve of his fifty-second birthday, while en route to the United States, Quezon wrote in his own hand in Spanish a letter in which he abandoned Masonry "forever" and expressed a fervent desire to reenter his old Church. The document was witnessed by Mrs. Quezon and Archbishop O'Doherty.

Again like Rizal, but not as flagrantly, Quezon flaunted generally accepted social standards. Rizal and Josephine Bracken, an Irish-English orphan, cohabited without benefit of clergy; it was not until the eve of Rizal's death that he said farewell to the "sweet friend that lightened my way" and was canonically united in marriage with her. Quezon similarly was never one to ignore a beautiful maid. Since he was a handsome gentleman of chivalrous bearing, the ladies reciprocated with languishing glances.

The one great romance of Quezon's life culminated in his wedding to Aurora Aragon, his first cousin, in Hong Kong in 1918. Not even the most pitiless critic ever took him to task for disregarding commonly recognized legal and religious rules concerning consanguinity. To have done so would have involved an attack on Mrs. Quezon.

I was privileged to enjoy the friendship of Aurora Aragon Quezon from girlhood until her death. I was in Hong Kong, having only a few days before bidding her adieu in Manila, when I read with horror of the massacre by the Huks of this fine lady and her elder daughter. Thus died the most revered and best-loved woman of the Philippines.

Quezon's incomplete autobiography, The Good Fight, found its inspiration in II Timothy 4,7: "I have fought the good fight. I have finished the course. I have kept the faith." These words from the Good Book could well serve as his epitaph. Quezon was not daunted by a kidney operation or an appendectomy, not even by the ravages of tuberculosis. Handicapped by impaired health, he could yet muster strength to outwit and defeat astute political opponents.

Manuel Quezon "finished the course" at Saranac Lake, New York, on August 1, 1944.

The Filipino people have expressed their esteem for their President in many and diverse ways. After him have been named Quezon Province, Quezon National Park, Quezon Bridge, Quezon Gate, Quezon Hill, Quezon Island, Quezon Stadium, Quezon Hall, Quezon Institute, and Quezon colleges, municipalities, boulevards, and avenues. A Quezon Memorial in Quezon City — the recently authorized capital of the Republic — constitutes the ultimate in veneration of a beloved son. Yet, the most signal recognition of his place in Philippine history comes when an ordinary Filipino says to another ordinary Filipino: "If Quezon were only here, things would be different." []

The late Senate President Eulogio "Amang" Rodriguez was one of those who dreamed of making Quezon City the gleaming metropolis that it is today. More than that, he helped in bringing the dream into reality. It was Amang who inspired Mayor Amoranto to pursue with relentless energy and dedication the building of this capital city of our nation. To this day, his children and grandchildren are keeping alive Amang's faith in Quezon City by continuing their support and cooperation in making Quezon City prosperous and progressive.

“We, who are at the helm of the city government, have vowed with all our hearts to lead, assist, and contribute our share in the monumental task of building the city that is now the capital of our Republic. But I must stress that if, in our community today, we are enjoying moral, material, political, and social stability and security, these we owe largely to all the residents here who have given their love, faith and hope in the promise and destiny of this metropolis. To them, we give our endless gratitude, with the earnest prayer that our abiding dedication to their well-being and happiness be worthy of their continuing trust.”
